

Prof. Emerita Ann Moore CBE qualified as a physiotherapist in 1973 and worked in Coventry Hospitals from 1974 to 1977. In 1977 she registered for a Certificate in Education at Wolverhampton Polytechnic and became a student Physiotherapy teacher at Coventry School of Physiotherapy. Completed the teaching qualifications in 1979 and she also became a full member of the Musculoskeletal Association of Chartered Physiotherapists (MACP) in the same year having undertaken specialist training in 1978/79.

In 2013 the School of Health Professions merged with the School of Nursing and Midwifery to become the School of Health Sciences and until September 1st 2015 she continued as Professor of Physiotherapy and became the Head of the Centre for Health Research in the new School of Health Sciences. Therefore she worked as an academic/researcher from 1980 to 2015. She retired from my post at the University of Brighton at the end of August 2015 and was delighted to be awarded an Emeritus Professorship in September 2015. In recognition of her scholarly and research activities she was awarded a Fellowship by the Chartered Society of Physiotherapy in 1999 and she was also awarded a Fellowship of the MACP in 2003. She was also awarded an Honorary Doctor of Science degree by Bedford University in 2012 in recognition of my work in supporting research capacity building in the Allied Health Professions and in Osteopathy.

Currently Director of the Council for Allied Health Professions Research (CAHPR) which has been formed through bringing together the Research Forum for Allied Health Professions and the Allied Health Professions Research Network which she developed and chaired from 2004 to 2014. She is President of NAEP the National Association for Educators in Practice and she is President of Physiofirst the UK's Private practitioner organisation. She is also Editor in Chief of Manual Therapy an International Journal of Musculoskeletal Science and Practice and has been in this role since 1995.

Most recently in June 2016 she was very delighted and proud to be awarded a CBE in the Queen's Birthday Honours list.
